When the trial ended in a settlement on 1/27/06, Plaintiff's counsel was immediately confronted with a deadline for an Alaska Supreme Court brief, that was due on 1/30/06. Plaintiff's counsel got an extension of time and finished and filed the Appellate brief on

2/13/06. That appeal involved a previous four week trial, with a 2000 page transcript and an appellate excerpt over 1,800 pages long.

After finishing the Appellate brief, Plaintiff's counsel immediately turned his attention to the Initial Disclosures due in this case. The documents to be reviewed in order to adequately provide an initial disclosure number in the thousands of pages. Therefore Plaintiff's counsel respectfully requests the Court grant Plaintiffs an additional 30 days until March 10, 2006 to complete the task.

When the date of February 10, 2006 was agreed to Plaintiff's counsel had no idea the court trial would last so long (it was originally scheduled for 2 weeks and was going into the fourth week when it settled at the end of the third week) or that a Supreme Court brief deadline would fall immediately after the end of the trial.

Plaintiffs' counsel would have filed this request for an extension of time earlier, but extensive trial preparation, prevented him from taking an ECF course prior to February, 2006, and then after taking the course, he had password problems that had to be resolved through the Court's ECF technician.

Plaintiffs' counsel attempted to contact Defendants' counsel Seth Row, to discuss the matter, but was advised he traveling. Defendants should not experience any prejudice due to this delay since no discovery has occurred to date, and Plaintiffs' counsel just received Defendant's initial disclosures which are over 1,000 pages.
